Moving to Digital Literacy Materials

I will use Patricia Polacco's book entitled "Thundercake" for printed text focus lesson sample and some movie clips from Lion King. Afterwards, we will work together as a group to create and explore some other multimodal and digital texts.

What is Technological Pedagogical Content Knowledge? by Kohler and Mishra

- Technology – how to navigate, which buttons to click (website)
- Pedagogy – approaches on teaching
- Content knowledge – science content, math content or language arts

The focus of my presentation is on the pedagogy and content of teaching multimodal and digital texts in Reading and Writing Workshops. However, the end result can be used in a cross-curricular content.

What Is Technological Pedagogical Content Knowledge?

Abstract

This paper defines a framework for teacher knowledge in technology integration as a modified technological pedagogical content knowledge (T-PACK). This framework is an extension of the TPACK (Technological Pedagogical Content Knowledge) developed by Koehler and Mishra (2008). The framework recognizes the need for teachers to be able to create opportunities for students to make use of technology to enhance learning. The paper begins with a table to illustrate the complex, interrelated nature of teaching. The four components of TPACK are defined as follows: technological pedagogical content knowledge, Pedagogical Content Knowledge, Technological Content Knowledge, and Technological Knowledge. The role of each component in teaching is described in detail, with examples illustrating the integration of knowledge Content, pedagogy, and technology. The integration of these modes of knowledge, both theoretically and in practice, produces the type of teacher knowledge needed to successfully integrate technology into teaching.

Patricia Polacco reads Thundercake

Majority of you are already familiar with Patricia Polacco’s Thundercake. But if not, this is what the whole book is all about. My focus lesson sample will be based on one part of this book and complement it with the Lion King movie clip.
Lion King "Reflection Movie Clip"

Sample multimodal text focus lesson. Simba claims that his father passed away but Rafiki, the monkey, was saying that he lives in him.
