AltSchool Student Reflection: Student Reflection Prompts (Resource For Educators)

January 2018

How might I use student prompts to encourage and support the reflection process?

Below are some possible reflection questions/prompts for the daily reflective practice. As you engage in student reflection, feel free to use this resource as a means of engaging student thought and reflection throughout their learning process.

What (I learned)
● What are you learning?
  ○ What knowledge, academics/content are you learning?
  ○ What skills are you learning or practicing?
  ○ What habits are you learning?
● How will you know that your work is of quality?
  ○ What is the Criteria for Success?

Why (I learned)
● Why are you learning this?
● Why is this learning important to you? / Important for you to learn?
● Why might this learning be important to someone else?
● Why might this learning be important to society?
● How does what you are learning now connect to/with, relate to previous learning or what you already knew/understood?

How (I learned)
● How are you learning this? What is the plan to help you learn this?
● How will your learning be assessed? How will you demonstrate your learning?
● What strategies and protocols have you/will be used in your learning?
● How will/have these protocols helped your learn and/or made your work better?
● What Habits are you using to help you learn?
● What skills did you have to practice/develop during your project? How will you carry this learning forward beyond this project?
● What protocols helped you learn? / What protocols were most helpful for you?
● What revisions have you made and why did you make these revisions?
● What roadblocks did you hit along the way and how did you overcome them?

And Now..(How my learning might impact me in the future)
● How has your new learning changed your thinking or understanding about:
  ○ What you thought you knew?
  ○ You as a learner?
  ○ Your conception of others?
  ○ How you interact with others?
● What do you think you might pull from your learning to help you with future projects?
● How have you changed as a learner and how will that affect your academic life?
● What have you learned about yourself? How will that affect how you interact with future schoolwork?
