We've taken the names, mixed the languages, lost the voices, and not the stories. How can we learn to listen?

In order to understand the sacred land, we must understand the stories that have been told. The story that has been told is still there, even if we can't hear it. How can we understand the sacred land?

The space between is just as important as the space of one's own land. Who were they? Why didn't I care?

I felt like a child

Sit quietly in the silence between two heart beats.

What can we teach us in these weaving moments of unifying complicities?

Sit quietly in the silence between two heart beats.

Anakha

What are the decolonizing actions we need to take?

Into presence

What is the land like now?

Anakha

Where can we find the only thing we're not afraid of?

Flux

Who are we? Is it okay to be ourselves?

Anakha

What are the decolonizing actions we need to take?