Stellar constellations or stellar clusters represent the web of mysterious threads that create our collective destiny, as well as the individual’s fate.

This foundation is made up of primordial myths incorporated within the being or essence of the collective unconscious, therefore representing the fundamental codes of humanity.
No matter how incredible it might seem at first, myths are the only authentic history of humanity. Therefore all other histories, events or destinies – individual or collective – always occur in concordance with these fundamental codes.

In the basic nature of every fixed star lives a part of the myth of the constellation to which this star belongs. Thus it is necessary to understand the nature of the myth of every constellation, and only then take into consideration the specific influence of the star.
People unconsciously carry within themselves activated myths (or parts of myths) and their destinies as defined by the story of the constellation, whereas all the other planetary influences are just pawns in the game, manifesting the primary need of the myth.

Precession - 1° every 72 years
VP = 5°H 00’

The Vernal axis is currently perpendicular to the galactic equatorial axis (~1998 A.D.)---creating Earth’s Precessional Cross.
While Sidereal Zodiac is fixed in relation to a certain star position, Tropical Zodiac is fixed in relation to declinations of the Sun. That’s why all fixed stars in Tropical Zodiac could be observed as very slowly transiting celestial bodies in relation to the signs, which are stationary. Because of the equinoctial precession, the vernal equinox moves 1° of ecliptic longitude every 72 years. In view of this fact, the exact beginning of spring in the tropical Zodiac is the foundation of its measurement, and the whole system is fixed in relation to this particular point, which remains stationary regardless of precession. From this perspective it could be said that the fixed stars apparently move 1° every 72 years.

The Transmitters of Fixed Stars’ Influence
Therefore, when it comes to interpreting a star’s influence on a planet, it is very important to estimate if that “stellar-planetary” combination will transmit the entire myth, or just part of it. This influence depends on whether the planet is a good transmitter for the constellation to which the star belongs. So, if the constellation is of a Venusian nature, then Venus will certainly be the best transmitter, and will easily transmit the whole myth. Whereas if that planet is Mars, which is not primarily connected to that constellation, it will transmit only the part of the myth to which it is particularly related.
To determine which part of the myth will be activated, in addition to the nature of the planet conjunct the star, it is also necessary to look for confirmation from the disposer of that planet, as well as from the planet that has the same nature as the star itself.

Orb for a Fixed Star influence is dependent on its affinity with the nature of the planet conjunct that star. In other words, the greater the affinity, the greater the allowed orb (more than 2° of arc, even up to 4°), because the star will be strongly connected to that planet.

This is the best way to determine which of several stars that could be situated within the same degree will have an influence on the planet.

Orion is the only constellation that ancient nations (especially Egyptians) respected as a God – and not only as the symbol of God, but as God-like himself, his physical appearance.

In one text from a pyramid, it literally said about Orion – or to the Egyptians, about Osiris:
“I fly from you, oh man,
I’m not for the earth.
I’m for the sky.
I have soared to the sky as a heaven.
I have kissed the sky as a falcon.
I am the essence of a god,
the son of a god.
Behold the faithful and loving Osiris has come as the stars of Orion, the Beautiful One,
I have come that I may glorify Orion.”
The correct translation of all the Gospels should be that the Christ was born “of the Virgin” and not “of a Virgin.” The definite article indicates that it is about a specific Virgin (in this case the horoscope sign), and not a virgin as a descriptive term. For people of that time, the meaning would literally have been “born of the sign Virgo.

Furthermore – born in a manger” could be explained as “in the fourth astrological house,” which means that he was born between 10:00pm and midnight.

Born beside an ox and a donkey = his Moon or Ascendant is close to the end of Taurus or at the beginning of Gemini.

Maybe the most beautiful thing in all this research is not only that we have in front of us the horoscope of Jesus, but discovering that his birth was foreseen by the Chaldean astrologers, discovered by them and in the authentic way they preserved the dates about his birth in the form of astrological symbolism.

Now we can see that, on the basis of their data, many years later the Gospels were written – in the form of coded astrological symbolism.
